

Lecture series Community Nursing 2024

Community-based care programs – a guided tour to various national health system strategies

What can we learn from each other...

Today's world, with its current challenges such as demographic ageing, the shortage of healthcare professionals and the demand to reduce health inequalities and promote health equity in the local communities in which people live, requires creative, analytical, and innovative skills and adaptations. Public Health Nursing, Community Health Nursing or Family Health Care follow aspects such as caring for community and family members, promoting health, improving health literacy, and reducing access gaps to health services. A challenging aspect in community-based programs! People need to be reassured that their health needs are being identified and that healthcare is available and accessible. How is family- and community-centred care implemented in different European countries?

This lecture series aims to illustrate various current national strategies and developments in the context of family- and community-orientated care, to discuss experiences and perspectives and to reflect on the role and activities of health care staff in family- and/or community-orientated care.
